Margaret Watkins became interested in photography in the early years of the 20th Century, so much so that she moved to New York City to practice her craft with the well-known photographer Clarence H. White. When he died, suddenly, in 1928, there was a contretemps with his wife over ownership of dozens of classic photographs, and Watkins left the United States, moved to Scotland.

Seduced by Modernity suggests that Canadian-born photographer Margaret Watkins (1884-1969) was just well-behaved enough to be forgotten, but accomplished, irreverent, and adventurous enough to be an engaging biographical subject in the right hands. O'Connor and Tweedie take their cues from the tradition of women's life writing, carefully balancing an assessment of Watkins's photographs

Seduced by Modernity: The Photography of Margaret Watkins

Her focus was daily life and her photographs, whether an exploration of the objects in her New York kitchen or the public and industrial spaces of Glasgow, Paris, Cologne, Moscow, and Leningrad in the 1930s, strike a balance between abstraction and an evocation of the everyday, offering a unique gendered perspective on modernism and modernity.
